Girl Reserves Have Party

The Daly City Senior Girl Reserves held a "Kiddies' Party," Tuesday evening of last week, at the home of the Misses Mildred and Frances Wolf of Los Banos avenue.

The evening was enjoyably spent in playing games, after which dainty refreshments were served to the following members: Hazel Eason, Martha Page, Helen Lazano, Anita Kale, Mildred Wolf, Dorothy Eason, Frances Wolf, Betty Louise Metzagman, Patsy Cochran, Margaret Ray, Eloise Allen and Mrs. Overstreet, the advisor.

Suicide Attempt Fails

An attempt at suicide was frustrated, Tuesday, by prompt action of the wife of John McLaughlin, 66, retired San Francisco fireman, residing at 367 Irvington street, this city.

When she entered the kitchen of the home, Mrs. Lottie McLaughlin, the wife, discovered her husband had opened gas jets in the stove and had closed all doors and windows. He was seated, waiting for death by asphyxiation from the fumes.

Mrs. McLaughlin immediately proceeded to turn off the gas and threw open the windows before the man had inhaled any large quantity of the deadly vapor.

It is reported no serious results are anticipated.

S. F. MAN FOUND UNCONSCIOUS

Andrew Olsen, 53, 553 Holly Park Circle, San Francisio, was found unconscious, lying on the street in front of 3286 San Jose avenue, the other evening.

It was found the man had received a broken leg. It is presumed he was the victim of a hit and run accident.

Local police removed him to the Villa Sanitarium in Company No 1 first aid truck. He was later transferred to the San Francisco Hospital.

ROYCE SPORTS TEAM AGAIN VICTORIOUS

Home Pitcher Turns In Two Hit Game To Down Rough Riders

(By "Moe" Plansky)

Jack Gertzenberg added another high class pitching performance to his impressive record last Sunday at the Harrison diamond. He set down the Rough Rider Cords team with only two hits, striking out nine men, enabling his team to win by the lopsided score of nine runs to two.

Hitting when hits means runs and playing a snappy fielding game ,the Royce Sports supported their pitcher's stellar twirling in a very able manner. Every member of the team rose to the occasion and each deserves considerable credit for this wonderful exhibition of the national pastime.

Jimmy Walsh, first baseman for the Sports, not only led his team in hitting, but also played a spectacular game in the field. Walsh garnered three hits in four tries at the plate. His home run in the sixth inning was the longest hit in the game.

Johnson and Ferrnando each collected two hits.

FILM STARS ARE ENTERTAINERS TO COUNTY VISITORS

Fourth of July Open House Held at Tanforan Track For Many Callers

Citizens of the entire county and other guests enjoyed the hospitality, Wednesday of this week, of the Columbia Pictures Corporation and Director Frank Capra.

A company has been on location at Tanforan track for several weeks engaged in the filming of the picture, "Broadway Bill."

The reception was staged between the hours of 9:30 a. m. and noon, and the large number of visitors who attended witnessed the making of several scenes for the picture.

A number of vaudeville skits were also put on by various members of the company.

Director Capra said the "open house" had been decided upon as an expression of appreciation for the many courtesies extended to the company by citizens during its labors at Tanforan.

The members of the company starring in the picture, Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy, were introduced to visitors, as were also other members of the cast, including Lynne Overman, who has just scored a big hit in "Little Miss Marker," Frankie Darro, Clarence Muse, Raymond Walburn, Edmund Breeze, Douglas Dumbrill, Ward Bond, Charles Levison, Harry Todd and a number of others.

Birthday Luncheon

A number of friends were entertained this week at a birthday luncheon by Mrs. Anna Romer at her home on Brunswick street in San Francisco.

Cards were also enjoyed by the guests.

Those present included: Julia Romer, Anna Norberg, Ada Lind, Laurette Jensen, Henrietta Nelson, Florence Nespoli, Johanna Iverson and Nelson Hansen, all of Son Francisco; Mrs. J. Campbell, Mrs. Nellie Peterson, Mrs. Hodeck and Mary White, all of Daly City.

COUNTY BOARD IN ARGUMENT ON GAS FUNDS

Agreement Finally Reached With Municipalities On Allocation Amount

The meeting of the County Board of Supervisors at Redwood City on Monday was attended by a large number of officials and citizens from the various municipalities of the county.

Officials present representing the cities were: E. P. Wilsey, city manager, San Mateo; E. A. Rollison, city manager, Redwood City; R. A. Klassen, city engineer, Daly City; Reese Lloyd, South San Francisco, and F. A. Bloom, Borlingame.

These representatives, through the spokesman, E. P. Wilsey, sought an allocation of approximately $80,000 as the share of various municipalities of the county tax funds for street work in their cities during the coming year and protested any less amount being allowed, as suggested by the board.

Disagreement with this demand was voiced by the members of the board of supervisors and by County Engineer James, who claimed about $31,000 would be a fair share to be apportioned out of his road department budget to the cities.

James pointed out that his road department has not adhered to any given boundaries, but under the relief program has done considerable work inside incorporated areas. He also said that the gasoline tax funds were never intended to be used for maintenance of city projects.

This contention was concurred in in an opinion by the district attorney.

After the noon recess, the board agreed to allocate $41,000 to the various municipalities of the county for work during the coming year.

The city representatives argued strenuously that the municipalities are entitled to a greater share than proposed by the county engineer.

A protest from citizens of Brisbane stating that only $500 had been spent in improvement on the streets of that

HIGH PRICE GIVES IMPETUS TO PRODUCTION OF SILVER

By J. W. MARCHBANK
(Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work)

Mining of silver is increasing under the impetus of a higher price for the white metal, and experts are estimating an appreciably greater output for this year. The estimate applies to the United States, as it is in this country that the producers are reaping the reward of the far-sighted action of the federal government in encouraging not only the mining of gold, but of silver as well.

If the production of silver is maintained throughout the year at the rate established in the first four months it looks as though the gain in this country will be about 7,000,000 ounces over that of last year. In the first four months statistics show a production of 9,108,000 ounces, with an indicated year's production of 27,324,000 ounces.

A slight spurt in Canada, which may easily enough come, with the price of silver on the market showing a tendency to rise, will bring the output in the northern country up to or even beyond the production of 1933. In the first four months of the year Canada produced 4,819,000 ounces. Latest reports from the north are to the effect that quite a number of properties are speeding up in turning out the white metal.

* * *

In the United States last year it is interesting to note that the well known Sunshine mine, in Idaho, was the largest individual shipper of silver, sending out 3,212,000 ounces. Montana, from various mines, produced the tidy total of 2,391,635 ounces.

The largest individual producer of silver in the world last year was the Burma Corporation, with 6,054,000 ounces. In Canada, Consolidated Smelters led with 5,551,349 ounces, derived from the Sullivan and other properties. Treadwell Yukon produced 2,240,228 ounces.

Kerr Lake, with 71,151 ounces, is the only Cobalt, Ontario, company listed for the year. The interesting sidelights on silver production are from the year book of the American Bureau of Metal Statistics.

An informative book off the press recently is "What Everybody Wants To Know About Money," by Nine Economists from Oxford, planned and edited by G. D. H. Cole. The book is a complete "coverage" of monetary theory and practice. Fabian Franklin, who knows quite a bit about the puzzling problem of money himself, has this to say, in the Saturday Review of Literature, about the Oxford production:

"In a book addressed to the non-professional public, an economist may be assumed to have in mind four objects: Dissemination of facts, exposition of fundamental theories, inculcation of sound ways of thinking, and statement of practical conclusions. Viewed from this standpoint, the Oxford book is very valuable."

In most of the chapters the reader will find himself becoming acquainted with phase after phase of the monetary system, with the bearing of its peculiarities upon the larger issues of economic life.

* * *

In connection with the favorable consideration by Frank A. Vanderlip, James P. Warburg and other authorities on monetary affairs of an international understanding establishing a gold bullion standard, it is interesting to call attention to remarks of Walter Runciman, president of the Board of Trade in London, about the sterling basis adopted in Great Britain following the abandonment of the gold standard three years ago. He said:

"The sterling basis has proved steadier than anyone could have anticipated—far steadier than gold. Canada, South Africa and India had their complications, but in the long run they depended for their stability on the level of sterling."

Under what is called a "modernized" gold standard, paper money can be redeemed in gold only for the purpose of settling international foreign trade balances. The gold will be in the form of large bars.

The indications are bright, indeed, for the United States and Great Britain, at least, getting together at no distant time for a thorough discussion, with hopes of a successful conclusion, on all the angles of the money situation.

FAST PLAY WINS THRILLER FOR THEATER TEAM

Good Pitching and Airtight Work by Entire Team Results in Victory

Behind the superb pitching of Bobo Silvestri, the Daly City Theater baseball team continued on its way to success by defeating the fast Burnall Smoke Shop nine, 4 to 3, in a thrilling ten inning battle.

The personnel of the Burnall team included several members of the St. Paul Senior C. Y. O. club, recent runners up for the state title.

The theater boys led throughout the game until the later innings, when a belated rally by the Burnall crowd knotted the score.

The winning run was scored in the tenth inning, when Jimmy O'Shea, the hard working catcher of the theater team, singled, stole second and scored on Dink's smashing single to left field. Dink won the right to the third base position by his wonderful hitting and fielding, one of his blows going for a triple.

Sammy Compagno also collected two solid hits to boost his average.

McKenna, for the losers, pitched a great brand of ball, striking out fourteen of the opposing batters.

AMERICAN LEGION AUXILIARY NOTES

District President Will Be Elected at Meeting in Veterans' Building

(By G. J. H.)

Daly City Unit No. 410 held its regular meeting Monday evening, July 2. The first nomination of officers for the coming year was held. The delegates to the district and department conventions were elected, as follows: Marcia Trier, June Craft and Catherine Foreman. Mary Crane, Helena Orr and Norma Anderson were chosen as alternates.

The district meeting will be held in the Veteran' War Memorial Building Wedneday evening, July 18, at 8:30 o'clock. The district president for the coming year will be elected by delegates at this meeting.

Daly City Unit is happy to announce the candidacy of Catherine Foreman for the office of District President. Her outstanding work for the American Legion Auxiliary is well known. And in recognition of these services we heartily recommend her for the position.

Our next regular meeting will be held on Tuesday evening, July 17, at 8:30 o'clock, owing to the fact that the district meeting will be held on Wednesday.

Last Thursday evening the San Mateo Council of the American Legion Auxiliary met in the Daly City Legion Hall with Bayshore Unit as hostess. The council's main objective at present is to put over the drill team in a big way at the convention.

The card party held in South San Francisco was a huge success and another is being planned to be held in the near future. Our team is assured of good uniforms through these entertainments.

The next meeting of the council will be held in San Mateo Legion Hall on Friday evening, July 13, at 8:30 o'clock.

COUNTY SERA WILL GIVE WORK TO UNEMPLOYED

Large Number of Men and Women Will Be Used On New Projects

The SERA work program started in San Mateo County, June 30. This was a small project using the services of only 98 men. More projects were started Tuesday of this week and it is hoped that within a week between 400 and 500 men and women will be given work. These are in addition to the 385 men and women who are now employed on the projects at present being carried on by San Mateo County. This number will be increased as soon as the necessary machinery for the handling of these large projects is perfected, and it is hoped that in a very short time all eligible men and women in the district will be given employment.

All men and women on the relief rolls are being carefully segregated, according to their several vocations, and every effort is being made to find suitable projects that will allow employment of eligibles in the work for which they are best suited. This plan includes "white collar" workers, as well as laborers and those who follow a trade.

Selection is based on individual need, with the stipulation that weekly earnings shall not exceed the amount necessary to meet the budgetry requirements of the workers' families. This regulation is necessary in order that the work may be spread over the largest possible area. The budget requirement includes: Food, shelter, fuel, light, medical care and suitable household necessities.

Each case will be determined individually; mass treatment is not being considered. The Heller budget system will be the basis of allotments. This system is the result of scientific study by some of the foremost authorities of the nation and is believed to thoroughly fill the needs of the average family requiring relief. The quantity and costs of food are based on a chart prepared for the Heller committee by the department of household science of the University of California, in collaboration with members of the committee. These food budgets may be changed from time to time, depending on the cost of food locally.

All projects will be of public character; of economic and social benefit to the general public or to publicly owned institutions. They are planned to be of the greatest efficiency and benefit to the community and state.

All projects submitted are studied by a local plans and projects committee, composed of representatives and practical men from each section of San Mateo County. The jobs are then submitted for approval to the San Mateo County Emergency Relief Committee, the San Mateo County Board of Supervisors and the SERA for final action.

Hours of employment have been set at not more than twenty-four hours per week per person. Wages will be at the prevailing rate for the occupation, according to a wage scale submitted by a local wage board.

Manager Backs Up Team

According to Mother Nature, there is always somebody who does a lot for others, but who receives no credit himself, and in this instance, it is said, that person is Ray Morton, who acts as assistant manage rof the Daly City Theater.

Ray is the owner and sponsor of the Daly City Theater baseball team. He is a very enthusiastic fan and is a strong booster for the development of young ball players.

He has only been here about a month, yet the boys of the team have taken to Ray in a big way and wish him to know that they sincerely appreciate his efforts.

DON'T YOU THINK SO?

J. W. Marchbank says: The best places for our subscribers and families to patronize are those well established home stores that assist in building up our rapidly expanding community. Our merchants are trying to sell at lowest prices consistent with the principles of the N. R. A.

They can afford to do so on account of the low rents they pay. If they buy correctly at wholesale, they can sell at as low prices as anyone.

A CHINESE GIRL STAR

Considering Bryn Mawr's high rank among the women's colleges of the country, it is rather surprising to learn that this year's brightest Junior at that institution is a Chinese girl, Miss Vung-Yuin Ting.

For attaining the highest scholastic record in her class, Miss Ting has been awarded the Maria L. Eastman Brooke Hall memorial scholarship, and for standing highest in her major subject, chemistry, she will receive the Charles H. Hinchman scholarship. After her graduation at Bryn Mawr next year she will enter the medical school of the University of Michigan.

Her father is Dr. Zoong Ing Ting, a leading physician of Shanghai, with whom she expects to practice after obtaining her degree of Doctor of Medicine. Her aunt is China's greatest woman physician and is the head of the Womens' Hospital in Tientsin.

Miss Ting is treasurer of the Bryn Mawr Athletic Club and was last year president of the International Club. She is 5 feet tall, weight 98 pounds, and is said to be one of the most popular girls in the college.

She is one of many bright students from the Orient who have demonstrated their ability to equal or excel their Occidental college mates in scholarship, in spite of what would seem to be a serious linguistic handicap.

Mr. and Mrs. K. Kaplowitch and son Jackie, Mr. and Mrs. R. Farrel and Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Thomas and son Raymond of San Francisco were visitors, Sunday, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. N. Meeth of Westlake avenue. Mr. and Mrs. Kaplowitch, who formerly resided in Daly City, were saying goodby to their many local friends before leaving on Monday for their new home in Seattle, Wash.

Avery Kinney of Mission street underwent an operation for acute appendicitis, Friday of last week, at a San Francisco hospital. His host of friends wish him a speedy recovery.

MINING NOTES

Gossip Pertinent to the Industry Gathered From Here and There

Diamond drilling contract on the property of Taylor Windfall Gold Mines Ltd., at Taseko Lake, in the Whitewater District, has been let to Boyles Bros. Drilling Company of Vancouver, and operations were begun recently.

Supplies for the summer's work have been taken in by plane from Seton Lake.

The crew at the present time numbers about twenty-five men, occupied on surface and in developing the known ore deposits, in preparation for the installation of the small Straub test mill which, it is hoped, will be in operation within a month, and which will be under the management of Chisholm Fraser, metallurgist and mining engineer of Vancouver.

In spite of some setbacks in the Bridge River area, mining activity in the neighborhood of Blackwater Creek, eighty-five miles from Squamish, is continuing in several directions.

The Mariposa property is employing about a dozen men, has recently added comfortable living quarters for its married personnel and ample bunkhouse and kitchen accommodations. The property is under the management of Jack Savage, and is approximately five miles from the railway.

Peyton C. Ramer, general manager of the Bremner Gold Mines, Inc., on a recent visit to Cordova from the Bremner Mine near McCarthy, announced that miners had uncovered an ore shoot which had been the objective of development work in the Bremner property for some time.

The shoot, which is a part of the famous Grand Prize vein, a carrier of rich free milling quartz, was found on a 250 foot raise to the surface from the upper tunnel. The shoot was struck about the middle of April and since that time miners have penetrated about fifty feet of rich quartz and are still working in it. There is fifty feet more of raise to make to reach the surface. Ore there will go about $60 a ton on the average, while particularly rich spots reach many times that value.

Ramer is exceedingly enthusiastic over the rosy outlook for the Bremner Mine and feels that nothing can stand in the way of making it one of the leading properties of the upper Copper River section.

Minto Gold Mines Ltd. is developing a group of twelve claims, approximately 600 acres in extent, on the north side of Bridge River, and approximately ten miles almost directly north of the Pioneer mine.

A persistent vein of complex sulphide ore, showing widths up to eleven feet, and average of possibly four feet, has been developd for a total distance of 400 feet on the dip from surface. It has also been exposed on surface by open cuts for nearly 4000 feet.

Expressing the belief that gold redemption of currency would ultimately be resumed, Premier R. B. Bennett, in the House of Commons at Ottawa, prophesied that gold coinage would disappear.

Gold redemption would be resumed by the nations of the world "since apparently it is the only basis on which we can have any stability," but the redemption would be in bullion, not in coin.

The largest log cabin town in the world at one time, Circle is again enjoying a little boom. The present population is now about fifty and the gold price advance is responsible for the new flurry of life. There are no "big outfits" in the neighborhood and no returns to justify a stampede, but there are gratifying results which are responsible for the further search and renewed activity.

"Busier than any town of its size that I have seen during the past year is Juneau," says none other than Professor B. F. Haley, head of the Economics department of Leland Stanford University, who took a round trip vacation to Juneau in June. He also said that he knew of no better vacation that could be taken than a round trip through southeast Alaska, especially if one has little time for the trip.

Pre-Fourth Accidents

Two persons suffered severe injuries in pre-Fourth of July accidents in this city, Tuesday, for which they were treated at Villa Sanitarium in Colma.

A giant firecracker which he was holding in his hand at the home of Daly City friends whom he was visiting, prematurely exploded and inflicted serious burns on the right hand of Frank Williams, 39, of Capitol avenue in San Francisco.

In the kitchen of her home at 481 San Diego avenue Miss Eve Thiber, 17, was severely scalded on both hands when a pot of boiling water was overturned.

Both victims of the accidents are reported out of danger.

MINE CREW USES CARRIER PIGEONS

Word comes from Vancouver, B. C., that carrier pigeons will be used to communicate with the outside world by the crew now engaged in reopening the old Money Spinner mine on Fire Mountain, sixty-two miles from Harrison, B. C.

The crew was sent in to the mine by plane, and in view of the difficulties of transportation to the mine, 5000 feet up the mountainside, they will use the pigeons to send out reports.

NOW, THEREFORE, said M. McQUAT and ROBERT B. GAYLORD, JR., as substituted trustees as aforesaid, hereby give notice that as such trustees and under and pursuant to said deed of trust, and pursuant to said recorded notice of breach and election to sell, and to accomplish the purposes and make the payments specified in said deed of trust, said undersigned trustees will sell the real property above described at public auction to the highest cash bidder for lawful money of the United States on the 28th day of July 1934, at eleven o'clock a. m., of said day at the main entrance to the City Hall in Daly City, San Mateo County, California.

BID FOR THANE PERSEVERANCE TURNED DOWN

Stockholders Reject Alaska Juneau Stock Offer for Thane Properties

The million dollar offer made by the Alaska Juneau Mining Company, according to information received at its offices in the Crocker building in San Francisco, for the Thane-Perseverance properties of the Alaska Mining and Power Company at Juneau was turned down by the stockholders of the latter company at a meeting held June 16 in New York City.

The rejection came as a surprise to Juneau interests familiar with the situation, as it had been expected the tender would be accepted. Whether the offer was regarded as too low, or whether the present owners of the Alaska Gastineau holdings have other plans in mind, has not yet been made known.

It is understood the Alaska Juneau is unlikely to resume negotiations for taking over the Thane properties.

The Alaska Juneau offered to exchange its own stock, at the rate of two shares for one of the Alaska Mind and Power Company, for its properties at Thane, Perseverance, including power plants and developed sites, transmission lines and other buildings. Had the deal been consummated it would have taken 53,802 shares of Alaska Juneau to pay for the properties. At current market quotations, this would have been in excess of a million dollars.

MOTHER IN LAW PAYS

Real mother-in-laws are permitted a certain amount of leeway in messing up family affairs, but a Glasgow judge has ruled that a mere prospective mother-in-law must deny herself such liberties. Hence, Mrs. G. H. Stewart, who interfered with her son's marriage to Miss Grace Leighton, must pay the prospective bride $750 damages.

BATH TUBS SCARCE

Out of 57,200 rural homes in Florida only about one-fourth can boast of a bath tub or shower bath, according to a recent survey. This situation may not be so serious as it would be in an interior state. Florida has a tremendously long coast line, and a large element of her people may take a dip in the Atlantic or Gulf with little difficulty.

TO LOVE! TO LIVE!

By R. K. WILKINSON

©, Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

EVER since she could remember, Edna May had loved Henry Appleton.

Of course at first it wasn't really love. Not the way sophisticated people thought about love.

It had all started with a girlish admiration, a sort of worship.

For Henry was truly a hero to be worshipped.

Even in grammar school he was an outstanding figure in boyish sports.

And later in high school when he began to feel his maturity he was elected captain of the football team, and was prominent in all social activities.

A tall, handsome figure, decidedly masculine, yet finding time to bask in the warmth of the worship Edna May and other girls bestowed upon him.

Afterward, Edna May entered Smith and Henry went to Harvard.

She could only see him occasionally then.

But the newspapers played him up big, predicted he would be the coming gridiron star.

And through it all Edna May's regard wavered not at all.

The girlish feeling of admiration ripened and grew into what must be love.

No other word could explain the thrill she felt when Henry asked her to a sophomore hop.

Edna May remembered that hop vividly.

She went over big, and this seemed to please Henry a lot.

Like all college men he had been afraid of being stuck with a flat tire on his hands. She'd only danced with him twice during the evening.

And after it was over four couples of them went home together in the same automobile, and Henry had left her at the door of the dormitory where she was staying with a hurried goodnight and the merest trace of a hand squeeze.

* * *

But he must like her, she told herself.

He must, or he wouldn't have asked her to a big event like the sophomore hop, with dozens of other girls willing and eager to go.

On three other occasions during the four years of college she had gone to Cambridge and attended Harvard functions with Henry.

And during her junior year he had been her guest at the prom.

But their relations had never got beyond the brother and sister stage.

That was the trouble.

Henry had always acted more like a brother to her. That sickening "big brother" stuff.

Just because their families were friends and they had been brought up together in the same town, had attended the same public schools, played in the same sand pile.

Henry probably thought, she reflected bitterly, he had a duty to perform. That's why he took her around some—out of respect to the families.

After college Henry came home and went to work in his father's bank, and Edna May lived with her folks and said she'd like to stay home for a while rather than travel in Europe for a year at her mother's suggestion.

But the real reason for it was because she wanted to be near Henry.

Surer than ever she was now that she loved him.

That feeling that had grown and ripened and turned from adoration to admiration and then to respect couldn't be explained any other way.

* * *

They saw each other frequently.

They played tennis together and swam and danced at the Country club. But Henry's attitude remained the same—a sort of casual indifference, a brotherly regard.

If he saw that she had developed from a gawky girl into full and appealing maturity, the change failed to interest him.

He talked to her freely about other girls, called her attention to any attractive females who appeared from time to time at the club dances, infuriated her by paying court to the young Mrs. Morgan, whose husband had died of pneumonia two weeks after their marriage.

It angered her to feel this way.

She knew it was useless, hopeless.

And because of this knowledge she maintained a careless indifference toward him.

It was only when she seemingly became interested in Bob Somerville that Henry's attitude changed.

"Keep away from him, kid," he advised.

"Bob's a good scout, but he's not for you. He has a trick of getting girls all haired up about him and then leaving 'em flat."

* * *

Edna May's head began to whirl. Was this why Henry had never paid any attention to her before? Was it because she had acted goofy about him, never appeared interested in any one else? Was this the key to his affections?

Thereafter Edna May became more attentive to Bob than ever.

She spent four or five nights a week with him. And when Henry asked her to accompany him to a club dance she informed him sweetly that she had already promised Bob.

And it worked!

Henry grew alarmed.

He cautioned her about Somerville again, and received a cold retort to the effect that Edna was now old enough to take care of herself.

The effect upon Henry made her deliriously happy.

He became angry.

At last she was making some impression; at last Henry was beginning to realize she was something besides a kid sister.

She consented once to go out with him, and Henry spent the evening handing her brotherly advice, to all of which she smiled sweetly and looked wise. Henry raged and took her home in sullen silence.

Edna May found difficulty in controlling her emotions.

Henry was waking up.

He was, she was sure, beginning to fall. She could tell.

Every girl can tell when she is making an impression on a man. And the thought made her deliciously happy. Her happiness couldn't be any more complete than on that morning, two days later, when she came to the breakfast table and picked up the early edition of the Reporter that was lying there. She glanced casually at the headlines and flipped the pages to the society section.

Right then her heart stopped beating and the breakfast table and the room and everything began to swim and sway crazily.

At first she couldn't believe her eyes. But she read it again, and then a third time. There couldn't be any mistake. It must be true. And there was Henry's picture and the widow Morgan's. And there were the black headlines staring back at her, "Banker's son elopes with young widow."

* * *

Edna May got unsteadily to her feet and somehow reached her room without uttering a sound.

Even then she didn't cry.

Her hurt was too great. She just sat before her window and stared out and saw nothing.

She wished she was dead.

How easy it would be to die now. It would simplify matters so much. It would spare her all the years to come, years of torment and misery.

Edna May suddenly stood up and went into her bathroom and took down a bottle of iodine. . . . Later she opened her eyes and became conscious of a burning sensation in her stomach, and decided she wasn't dead.

Her mother was there, bending over her with anxious eyes.

She wondered why Edna May had taken such a large dose of cough medicine, and Edna May shut her eyes and didn't attempt to explain.

She'd have to try again, she told herself. She couldn't go on. She couldn't.

At noon Edna May got up and dressed and went out for a walk. At the corner of Fisher and Spruce she turned and crossed over to detour around a roped-off area where some construction work was going on.

She remembered hearing the warning cry, but her mind was too occupied to give it much heed. Then she saw the heavy crane swinging toward her, and screamed. Death stared her in the face, and she tried to avoid it.

Death! A few hours before she had sought it. And now she screamed and ran and prayed that it would not claim her. . . .

* * *

"It's a pity," the doctor was saying, "she'll be scarred for life . . . such a good-looking girl, too . . . even though they do get damages, it won't do much good . . . damages won't remove that scar. . . ."

Edna May opened her eyes and looked at the doctor and her mother and father, and smiled.

There was pity and sorrow in their faces, but Edna May still smiled.

She reached for her mother's hand and drew her toward the bed. "It can't be as bad as that," she said. "It could be so much worse. I—I'm lucky to be alive."

After a while she thought of Henry and wondered if he was happy with the widow Morgan.

She hoped he was. She wanted every one to be happy. There were so many important things to do.

Life meant so much.

It was so good—so good to just be alive. To feel that you had years and years to live. How foolish she'd been to try to crowd it all into so short a space of time, to have had but a single purpose in mind.

Edna May closed her eyes again, but the smile lingered. She shuddered, remembering how near death she had been. She sighed. Life—just to be alive—was so sweet.

It was selfish to waste life away. . . . So many things far more important and necessary than love.

Edna May at last had found herself.

A Weighty Subject

William Howard Taft, former President of the United States, was a man of big proportions, both mentally and physically. He was also blessed with a keen sense of humor. A Washington newspaper correspondent once asked him if he would tell how much he weighed. "No, sir," boomed the President. "Mr. Reed used to say that no gentleman could weigh more than 200 pounds. I have amended that to 300." Mr. Taft actually weighed more than 300 pounds at one time.

Eskimo Children Lucky

The Eskimo child is in some respects the luckiest child in the world. He is never scolded or whipped and is respected and revered by his parents. This is because the superstition-dominated Eskimo believes that in the child the spirit of its dead grandfather or grandmother lives again. For this reason, it is quite common to hear an Eskimo mother address her child as mother or father.

Lace Triumphs Anew in the Mode

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

HERETOFORE lace has generally been regarded as a thing of esthetic mein—a medium of luxury as it were, limited to evening gowns and dressup blouses and frilly furbelows and such. Which is all well enough, for when it comes to feminine fascination lace never faileth.

In this day of enlightenment and independent thinking, however, we are not allowing ourselves to be hampered by tradition or custom and so the fashion world has come out boldly this year with the message that lace can be every whit as practical and utilitarian as it can be glamorous and pictorially lovely. Now that the practicability of lace has been recognized beyond question, style creators of high degree as well as those of lesser prestige are using it without reserve for many of their smartest tailored and sports suits and dresses and blouses.

There is such a variety, too, of laces nowadays which adds greatly to the sphere of usefulness. Many of the newer types have a fabric-like quality which makes them versatile for all sorts of apparel.

The big thrill about the new cotton and linen thread laces is that as perfectly beautiful as they are, they qualify 100 per cent to the good when it comes to being practical and wearable, in that they launder wonderfully, not even requiring the painstaking ironing and pressing which is imperative with the majority of washable materials. Wherefore it is easy to see why so many women are including blouses and dresses made of serviceable laces in their week-end wardrobes.

The two blouses illustrated are typical of the practical turn lace is taking this summer. Each is designed to be worn with almost any type of suit, either tailored or afternoon, for the lace itself lends softness and charm and distinction, while the styling is simple and tailored.

One of the new "string-type" laces made in an interesting weave of heavy and fine cotton thread fashions the blouse with the ruffle-edge revers.

The other blouse is made of a more conventional lighter weight lace. Its mellow creamy color is extremely flattering. The effective simplicity of these blouses is exactly what women of discriminating taste covet for summer wear. Blouses like these are the easiest kind of garments to make, even for a non-expert. As to their coolness for hot-weather wear, that is one of their most delightsome features.

Miss 1934 will wear lace in pastel shades quite informally throughout the summer evening dine-and-dance hours. It is not enough that one have a frock of lovely lace but to satisfy fashion's demands there must be a jacket to match. The ensemble in the picture is typical of the newest trend in lace two-pieces. It is of a heavy cotton lace in pale pink. Paris has decreed trains for evening dresses and this one is no exception. Even though it boasts a slight train the gown is really quite informal, the more so in that it has tiny sleeves and is cut high in front—a low-cut back, however, for such is the way of the mode this season. The jacket is styled with utmost simplicity as are all those which are matched to the lace frocks they top. And so on and so on it goes, wherever smart youth gathers this summer, on country club porches, on moonlit decks—the first favorite will be lace.

TAILORED THINGS NO LONGER DULL

Tailored things used to be dull. Dull in both color and material, but all that has changed now.

Consider Philippe et Gaston's tailored three-piece ensemble. The jacket and skirt are in black "Anophane"—which is a combination of angora and cellophane. The angora naturally gives it that softness, which we are not so accustomed to associate with a strictly tailored suit, and the cellophane produces a glint that has a hint of sequins in it.

The waistcoat, which completes the outfit, is of white albene pique, and there are cuffs of the same and a perky bow tie at the throat of the waistcoat.

Soft Ribbons and Flowers Take Away Severe Lines

In presenting summer hats the mushroom brim is important, but the sailor and brim lifted at back also find favor.

There is a marked tendency toward "pretty" colors in the trimming, as, for example, a white sailor with a cluster of flowers and an ombred taffeta ribbon in pale blue; a mushroom of brown brilliantine straw adds a pink rose over and under the brim supplemented by a twist of pink velvet ribbon around the crown.

Sheer effects are cleverly handled and very much worn.

Printed Linen in Plaids Interesting New Motif

Linen evening dresses will be seen again in printed varieties this summer. The pattern interest is varied and lively stripes and plaids again of major importance. In high style there is the linen gauze with content of silk that is available in less bold designs than earlier when Algerian stripes and plaids were the thing. Embroidery further diversifies the pattern interest.

HATS FOR TOTS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Mothers and big sisters need not feel that they are the only fortunates to wear those clever hats which are crocheted from crepe paper. Comes now the younger generation's turn. We have picked for illustration the two most fetching small-girl types that could be found. At the top in the picture see Amy's poke bonnet (inspired by "Little Women") for her dressy-up chapeau and below the merry-go-round beret for wear at play. Think of it, each will cost only fifteen cents, or the price of a fold of crepe paper. The crocheting is so easy, both hats can be made in no time—a few odd moments spent calling upon your neighbor.

SYNOPSIS

On her way to a position in Lostland Academy, Janet Mercer, young professor of English literature and rhetoric, meets on the train a young man, Arthur Fleming, also on his way to the Academy, as professor of mathematics and chemistry. They reach the railroad station, they meet Mrs. Denver, engaged as matron of the Academy. At the school the group is struck by an air of mystery pervading the lonely place. Gordon Haskell, the proprietor, welcomes them. Wilton Payne, teacher of psychology, completes the faculty.

"Danger — mystery — the unknown; the untried."

"Precisely. What are the manifestations of fear? Intense silence or wild raucous sound? Oh, I am jesting, of course—but I do prefer deep silence to shrill noises. Miss Mercer, will you have French or Russian dressing on your salad?"

"May we see the establishment after dinner, sir?"

"Well, really, I'd much prefer your pupils should think of you as far-off Olympians."

"At ease on Parnassus' slopes," Payne remarked with a lifting of his eyebrows.

Haskell had drawn up a chair next to Janet's. She looked lovely, Arthur thought. In his heart he had already constituted himself her protector, and he resented with all the ardor of a fiery nature the cold, creeping courtesy of this strange schoolmaster guarding so jealously the almost inhuman discipline of his establishment.

"Miss Mercer, your pupils will love you," Haskell was saying in his soft, purring voice.

"I think it is so much more important that they should love the subjects I teach," she answered crisply, shrinking back from his too close proximity.

"They will love both." He rose, fixed them with a queer, intense glare of a glance. "I recommend you all to go to your rooms. The work will begin in earnest tomorrow."

They heard his footsteps echoing down an apparently endless corridor. Mrs. Denver folded up her napkin, and taking a pin from her dress pinned it carefully. Payne was staring at the tablecloth. Janet's fair face seemed like a gleam of summer in the soft light of the candles and her eyes, wistful, half fearful, drew Arthur's heart to that shadowy region where love begins. He stepped to the door. "They keep this place very dark."

"Come in out of that corridor, Mr. Fleming," Payne commanded "and let's—talk."

Arthur turned back. The two women were sitting in a listening attitude. "I thought I heard a voice," Mrs. Denver said.

"So did I," Janet echoed.

"I want to make a pact," Payne announced. "One doesn't have to teach psychology to know when a situation rings strange. Let us hold together here, whatever happens."

They looked in each other's faces solemnly. Janet reached out her left hand, and Arthur took it. They made a ring. Far off a bell struck."

"There, at last I've heard a bell," Mrs. Denver sighed. "I don't think I could have slept tonight if I hadn't heard just one bell."

CHAPTER II

When Janet had said good night to Mrs. Denver, she bolted her door and wondered whether she would be able to sleep. Ready for bed, she put out her light, and, raising the shades at her windows saw that the rain was over, and the moon, a little past the full, had risen and was illuminating the gardens, casting long ragged shadows of the pines across the unkempt lawns. While she looked and mused over the strange situation, two figures emerged from the gloom of the trees—in one of them she recognized the principal of the school; but the other was a man fully six feet three inches tall; and with long arms like a gorilla. His broad, whitish face was bored into by black eyes, and slashed rather than featured by a great, red mouth. His appearance was so terrifying she sank on her knees and drew the lace window curtains between her face and the window. Who was he? A man-of-all-work?

Whatever he was, he was in the confidence of his master. They advanced slowly, in earnest conversation. At last they paused beneath her window, ceased talking, and gazed up steadily for about two minutes.

Her heart beat so violently that she felt they must hear it. All at once the moon went under a cloud, and their scrutiny ceased. She stole into bed, and, in spite of her fears, was soon asleep.

How long she had slept she did not know when she found herself all at once wide awake, sitting up in bed, and wondering if a far-off sound of feet had been actual or part of a dream. Not hearing it again, she lay back on her pillow and went over the events of the day, her mind now alert and active. Fear gave way to curiosity. Why had Haskell segregated his four teachers on this floor? Why had he wished to keep them away from the scholars?

Her curiosity strengthening with every moment, she resolved at last on a bold move. This strange principal had probably gone to bed. She would creep down and explore the ground floor of the academy and probably find some clue to the mystery. Acting at once on this resolve, she put on her clothes, and softly stepped out into the corridor and made her way down the curved staircase to the central hall.

There she stood for a moment in uncertainty, but started at last toward a door, to reach which she had to pass the glass door of the study room where the scholars had been so industriously bent over their books. As she went by she instinctively glanced in. The room was flooded with moonlight. And to her horror she saw the four forms still leaning their heads over their desks, absolutely motionless.

For a moment she wanted to scream; to run in terror from this house. Were they still forms of the dead or were they dummies—put there—for what purpose?

Very softly she tried the door; it was unlocked; and she entered, closing the door behind her and calculating the amount of courage it would require to approach the nearest figure, which was that of a young boy. His head, covered with thick brown hair, was supported in hands which had a waxy look; and he was hunched in a lifelike manner over his book. Very softly she stole toward him, when sounds came from the hall which sent a chill to her heart. She dropped down behind one of the big desks and close to the figure, which she now saw was a wax dummy. Peering out of her shadow she perceived two heads close together, their white faces staring steadily through the glass door into the schoolroom. She recognized the immense gorilla-like man she had seen on the campus, and Gordon Haskell.

Her Heart Beat So Violently That She Felt They Must Hear It.

She shook like a leaf in her hiding place, praying fervently that they would not enter the room. To her intense relief, they turned away, and she heard their retreating footsteps. A faintness had nearly overcome her; but a rush of the old fighting spirit, when she found herself again comparatively safe, brought her to full consciousness.

The waxen boy drew her eyes again, half fearfully, half curiously she crept nearer to him. His face was noble, absorbed, a slight smile on the firm lips and in the deep, studious eyes over which his long lashes curled. She did not dare rise yet, but she reached up her hand and touched the waxen hand laid with such resolution on the desk. Why did he seem so alive! so vibrant! why did he smile as if he had something to tell her! She noticed that all four figures bore a kind of family resemblance to each other; and on all four faces was a look of gentle resignation, as if they had something to communicate when their hour should come.

Whoever had made these figures had been a true artist. They were as far beyond waxwork as a Leonardo drawing is beyond the efforts of a schoolgirl: grief, amazement, exquisite tenderness, seemed by turn to have guided their composition. The two girls—a little younger than their "brothers"—were of a workmanship as subtly calculated to envisage beauty and innocence as was possible. Their lovely eyes in the moonlight were bent upon their books; their curls fell thick about their slender necks—columns fit to adorn some little circular temple of Eros.

Terror of these figures began to stir in her—terror of them in their immobile beauty; their everlasting pursuit of an education that would never be finished; their half wistful, secretive smiles as over some inexplicable memory. She began to move from them, dragging her feet as in a nightmare, and turning her head constantly to look at them lest one of them should rise and follow her and try to detain her. This horrid fancy faded; and as she neared the door a great pity and gentleness replaced the fear. It was foolish! They knew nothing, yet she must step softly not to awaken them from their trance of study.

Milk on Water Lures Fish

Fishing in slow-moving or sluggish water can be stimulated by pouring milk on the surface ahead of the boat. As soon as this spreads and permeates the water the fish wake up and begin biting.—Detroit News.

California Soon To Have Brilliant Period Of Sport

By J. W. MARCHBANK

Looking into the future I vision racing on the broadest of foundations in California, with the pastime essentially a popular sport and not at all of the kind that brings joy to no one but the promoter. Some folks may think I have placed undue emphasis in dissertations on racing on the necessity of the elimination of the commercially minded individual from the game. Far from admitting any error in that direction, I give notice here any now I'll not be satisfied until my object has been attained, that of having short meetings of such superlative class they will be of world wide interest. "Class" puts the promoter in the junk pile, just where he belongs.

The individual does not count in the great sport. Racing everywhere has been at its best when the profit motive has been subordinated. The people flock to the tracks for enjoyment and return willingly enough when they discover they have not been deceived, that the course is being run as a sport and not as a business.

The nobility of the thoroughbred itself would suggest keeping the pastime within the reasonable limits of sportsmanship. As Charles E. Brossman, conditioner of the good mare Imp in her days of racing, recently said:

"The thoroughbred horse is primarily the strongest, toughest member of the equine race. It can stand more strenuous exertion, with a determination to never give up, than any other breed of horses. Its sinews and tendons are tougher and its bones are not so porous as the larger bones of the draft animals. That is why scientific breeders desire a thoroughbred cross in order to improve the general horse stock of the country."

One of the first steps in preparation for the glorious days ahead, with the thoroughbred as the chief actor, is reducing the commission on the pari-mutuel pools. As is generally accepted by students of the conditions of the sport, twelve per cent is altogether too high a "take." Reduce the commission to nine per cent, with the racing associations getting six per cent and the state one and one-half for a big purse fund, and one and one-half for other purposes. That's a program every sportsman should work for, early and late.

Our National Birthday

Our second president, John Adams, poured out his very soul in support of the Declaration of Independence before the document was signed. He said, in part:

"But whatever may be our fate, be assured that this Declaration will stand. It may cost treasure, and it may cost blood, but it will stand, and it will richly compensate for both. Through the thick gloom of the present I see the brightness of the future, as the sun in heaven. We shall make this a glorious, an immortal day. When we are in our graves, our children will honor it. They will celebrate it with thanksgiving, with festivity, with bonfires and illuminations. On its annual return, they will shed tears, copious, gushing tears—not of subjection and slavery, not of agony and distress, but of exultation, of gratitude and joy. Sir, before God, I believe the hour is come. My judgment approves this measure, and my whole heart is in it. All that I have, and all that I am, and all that I hope, in this life, I am now ready here to stake upon it. And I leave off as I began, that, live or die, survive or perish, I am for the Declaration. It is my living sentiment, and by the blessing of God it shall be my dying sentiment.

"Independence now, and Independence forever!"

And how well and faithfully these prophetic declarations are being relived by the petriotic citizens of our present generation.

There is not a real American who does not thrill at the story of how colonial leaders affixed their signatures to the Declaration of Independence—the document which gave birth to our mighty nation. Let us stimulate a greater spirit of patriotism, and thereby deal telling blows to those in America who seek to undermine our constitution.

Economic Results of NRA

Recently a birthday party of great national importance occurred. It marked the first anniversary of NRA—the most extraordinary bureau ever created by the federal government.

Birthday "greetings" were of two kinds. On the one hand, NRA executives and others praised the bureau to the skies, said that it had started us well on the road to recovery, would take us all the way before long. On the other hand, various critics said that the NRA represented the downfall of democracy, that it meant we were in for either fascism or communism, that it had abrogated every major provision of the constitution, etc.

Neither of these viewpoints is indicative of the stand the American people will take when they finally express an opinion. They know the NRA has done fine things—such as eliminating sweat shops and child labor and giving labor a better break so far as wages, hours and working conditions are concerned. They know it has likewise done things which are not so good—such as setting itself up as a czar over routine business matters, about which situation they are much confused.

Most people believe the main trouble with the NRA is that it grew too fast and tried to cover too much territory. In the beginning, it was principally an arbiter of working conditions—it laid down minimum wages and maximum hours of work rulings. Then it began to branch out into very different fields, such as price fixing, etc.

The powers that be at Washington have recognized that changes in its application were necessary. Price fixing has been given up. They are about to reduce the number of codes in effect by 70 or 80 per cent. The governing powers are becoming much less arbitrary in their actions. In brief, it looks as if NRA in the future will be mainly concerned with wages and hours and working conditions, as was its initial purpose.

Most of these changes, which are being received with great applause by the bulk of industries, may be credited to Mr. Roosevelt. The president is the commander in chief who makes the final decisions. The belief is widely held now that General Johnson may be supplanted before long. He is able, energetic, aggressive and honest, but he has made too many enemies. He gets things done—but there are always a great many wounded feelings when he is finished. His great weakness is lack of tact, plus amazing sensitiveness. Criticism, no matter how friendly or well disposed, invariably angers him.

If the old-time humorists could come back to earth, about the only thing they would find still being used would be their own jokes.

A reformer compares kissing to the licking of salt by cattle. And, like the cattle, the kissers come back for more.

EQUINE EXHIBITION TO BE SOCIETY EVENT

The Eigth Annual San Mateo County National Horse Show will be held at the Menlo Circus Club in Atherton, August 6 to 12, inclusive, it was announced today by Mrs. W. P. Roth, show president. The equine event which will attract more than 300 of the nation's finest show horses, will open this year on Monday evening, coming to a close the following Sunday night. Three matinee performances are scheduled during the week, on Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

Exhibitors from the east and the west will compete for thousands of dollars in prize money, trophies and ribbons. There will be stake events and classes for three and five-gaited saddle horses, fine harness horses and ponies, hunters and jumpers, polo ponies and stock horses.

SIDELIGHTS

The Bible reading marathon appears to be coming back as an indoor sport. A few weeks ago Rev. Dake and members of his Zion City, Ill., congregation, read the Bible from cover to cover in sixty-nine hours and seventeen minutes, breaking all records. But the Zionists were not to enjoy their triumph for long. Recently Rev. Pitcher and a team from the Pentecostal Church of God, in Baltimore, lowered the time from Genesis to Revelation to fifty hours and fifty-six minutes.

Disks of wax are heated by electricity and discharged through a nozzle in a fine stream for sealing letters and packages in a machine for use in the home or office.

PLAN MOTOR TRIPS OVER VARIED ROUTES

Motorists who chart their summer vacation tour with the idea of taking the shortest possible route between main points on their trip may save considerable mileage, but they do so at the cost of missing a large part of the enjoyment that a less direct routing usually will give. They miss the charm of less traveled roads, and the variety of scenery and other attractions to be found on side trips and loop routes.

A thorough study of route possibilities in advance of the summer vacation tour is one of the greatest assurances of enjoyable tours, according to the touring bureau of the California State Automobile Association. One of the most frequent requests for information received at the touring burau is for a choice of routes for possible loop trips, including side trips. Naturally, where time is a vital element in a trip, circuitous routes are not desirable. But in those instances where pleasure, relaxation and education are the primary objects of the journey, variety adds greatly to the value of the tour.

California's vast network of roads has changed the situation from the old days when there was generally only one good road between any chosen points. While one road may be more direct than another now, there usually is an excellent way to go and an equally attractive one by which to return.

Making the tour as inclusive as possible within a limited time, and yet avoiding the danger of making it a constant race against time, demands an advance preparation that the prospective traveler should make to get the most out of what should be the outstanding experience of the year for the motorist, the summer vacation trip.

COLUMN OF N. R. A. FACTS

INFORMATION regarding the N. R. A. will be furnished each week by W. H. CLAY, Chairman of the local N. R. A. Publicity Committee.

The mighty machine set up by the American people, under NRA guidance, to carry our homeland forward to the shining goal of permanent economic security for all is now running on all eight cylinders.

The vital wheels and cogs of that machine are the more than 400 NRA codes of fair competition, under which 96 per cent of the country's industry is now operating.

The new Blue Eagle, distribution of which began May 1, is both the symbol and the guardian of the machinery designed to make economic democracy a reality in America—to make the depression from which the National Recovery Administration is lifting us the last in the Nation's history.

The signifiance of the new Blue Eagle is stupendous to every man, woman and child in America. That significance is the same whether we think of the individual as a consumer, as an earner of wages or salary, or as the head of a business enterprise.

For the special Blue Eagle is first and foremost the emblem of national solidarity in the greatest effort ever made, to make business a fair and square game. It is the symbol of the happier homeland to be builded with NRA aid—the harbinger of the day when employer, labor and the public will be full and equal partners in the operation of America's mighty industrial machine. It is the honored seal placed by Uncle Sam on the business establishment which is complying 100 percent with the code governing the industry of which it is a part.

A distinctive Blue Eagle in the window of a store, factory or office, means that every man and woman behind that window is marching in step with the times. That he or she is either paying or receiving fair wages —working fair hours and, therefore, fairly sharing the available work with their fellowmen. The new insignia on a piece of merchandise means that fair practices have been observed in making and marketing of it—that it is being sold at a fair price, consistent with a fair profit.

Wherever a new Blue Eagle is seen, it means that people are working wholeheartedly with the National Recovery Administration in its effort to place a full pay envelope in every home in the land—to banish the fear of want from American minds forever. That the firm displaying it, has united with other members of the same industry, to complete the work of national recovery by stamping out unfair practices and methods of competition. That it has enlisted in the nationwide drive to outlaw exploitation of any individual or group in the country.

Would not any man refusing to subscribe to those high social ideals instantly be condemned before the tribunal of public opinion as an enemy to progress, as a traitor to humanity? And is it not eminently just, therefore, that the regulations governing the use of this emblem of cooperation with the National Recovery Administration should be stringent, and that the might of the United States government should stand behind them?

Those regulations are strict. They state that "Any person may be publicly deprived of the right to display any Blue Eagle or other NRA insignia, if he violates any provision or the spirit or intent of any code, Presidential agreement, or regulation duly prescribed and approved." Moreover, the right to continue to display the new Blue Eagle depends upon continued compliance.

To make certain that no chiseler shall ever be able to shelter under the wings of the special Blue Eagle, the emblem remains the sole property of the United States government. Only government agencies have the legal right to issue the individual Blue Eagle. (When the emblem has been officially issued, the business establishment entitled to its use, naturally has the right to have any number of reproductions of its individual insignia made, for display purposes.)

If it is clear what the new Blue Eagle means to the individual, no appeal need be made to anyone's sense of patriotism to support those who are supporting their own government's effort to better the living conditions of his 125,000,000 countrymen. It is obvious that the support of the Blue Eagle must be universal and sustained, if it is to establish our country as the best place in the world in which to earn a decent living—decently.

HIGH LIGHTS OF THE WEEK

Twenty-four Million Working Under Codes: Completion of the first year of NRA's task of codifying industry finds 24,000,000 people working under more than 450 codes which have fixed minimum rates of pay, maximum work weeks and eliminated destructive trade practices.

* * *

Payroll and Employment Gains: Monthly returns supplied to the U. S. Department of Labor by 18,000 establishments in 89 of the country's manufacturing establishments reveal that payrolls are up 58.6 per cent and employment 30.8 per cent for the first four months of 1934, as compared with the same period last year. The General Business Activity Index of the New York Times, for the same period, is up 24.4 per cent.

* * *

Purchasing Power Up: By April of this year the average weekly wage in 25 of the largest manufacturing industries was $21, against $15.49 last year. Cost of living for the same period has risen 9.7 per cent. (Source: National Industrial Conference Board.)

* * *

Three Thousand Labor Disputes Adjusted: More than 3000 labor disputes, affecting two million employees, have been amicably adjusted by the National Labor Board since its creation last August. This is a remarkable record, in view of the rapid shift to entirely new relationships between labor and management, fostered under NIRA.

* * *

Arbitration Works Under Motion Picture Code: This code is the only one in which arbitration provisions are incorporated, providing for a signed agreement by every employer and every union organization of workers to arbitrate before resorting to strikes or lockouts. The efficacy of this policy is proved by the fact that since the code's adoption last December there has been not a single failure to settle peacefully differences which have arisen in more than twenty cities and 125 theaters.

* * *

Minors Benefited: Three more industries (rolling steel door, wood heel, metal screen) have just joined the ranks of those in which youngsters under 18 are no longer permitted to work at hazardous processes. This prohibition already applies to the opperation of punch presses, saws, abrasive and polishing machinery, and exposure to poisonous fumes in tanneries, chemical works, cleaning and dyeing establishments.

* * *

Study Guide in Demand: Mony organizations have written to NRA expressing their conviction that the study guide, "What Is The NRA."? published last week, fills a real need. Among the groups planning to make wide use of this booklet are the American Association of University Women, Y. W. C. A., Workers Education Bureau, Womens Trade Union League, Association of Junior Leagues, National Council of Catholic Women, and National Council of Jewish Women.

* * *

Tributes to NRA: Among the scores of birthday tributes to NRA and its Administrator were messages from industrialists, labor leaders, business and civic groups, members of Congress and the President's Cabinet. Telegrams expressing satisfaction with operation of their codes and pledging continued co-operation were received from many trades and industries—cotton and silk textiles, retail trade, men's clothing, ladies' dresses, coats and suits, plumbing, lumber, stationery, artificial flowers and feathers, furniture floor wax and polish, and others.

* * *

What the President Has Done: "When the tale of this year of NRA has been written into the pages of history, no man will question the high purpose and successful effort of the President to write into the cruel ledgers of pure commercialism at least a little of the doctrine that came down to us from a mount on the shores of Genessaret. From that day to this, no one has done more to temper man's inhumanity to man, than General Johnson—Charleston, West West Virginia—June 6, 1934.

BANK OF AMERICA'S EARNINGS INCREASE

Earnings of the Bank of America N. T. & S. A. and Bank of America (California) for the first six months of 1934, totaling $5,214,000, covered dividend requirements for the entire year by a margin of more than $1,000,000 and continued the uptrend in profits with a 17 per cent gain over earnings for the first half of 1933.

After payment of two quarterly dividends aggregating $1,800,000, the amount of $1,542,000 was appropriated for reserves and $1,872,000 added to undivided profits during the past six months, which increased this account to $17,048,000 on June 30.

The earnings were at the annual rate of $10,400,000, or two and a half times the annual dividend rate of $4,100,000, established when directors increased the quarterly disbursement in June.

The combined statement of condition of the Bank of America N. T. & S. A. and Bank of America (California) as of June 30, 1934, shows total deposits of $926,004,000, an increase of $158,590,000 since June 30, 1933.

The statement shows total resources of $1,091,377,000, with total cash of $101,448,000 and with $438,234,000 invested in United States government, state, county and municipal bonds and other securities. Market value of these securities is higher than the amount at which they are carried on the books of the bank, the report shows.

FINANCIAL LEADER GOOD FILM "EXTRA"

An amusing story comes from the scene of the filming of the picture, "Broadway Bill," at Tanforan.

It seems that last Saturday, while engaged in filming expressions of various faces in connection with an exciting scene depicting the finish of a race on the track, Director Coleman sought through the crowd for a "distinguished looking person," in order to add the distinguished one's expression to the compendium, he stated.

Coleman finally saw a man with a white goatee and called to him.

"Hey, you, come over here!" he said.

The man came and his face was "shot" for the picture.

"Here's your $3," said Coleman.

But the distinguished looking man declined the proffered money. Coleman asked his name and was informed that the man who had answered to the "hey you" call was William H. Crocker, Hillsborough, head of the Crocker First National Bank of San Francisco and one of the leading financiers of the Pacific Coast.

"Incidentally, Mr. Crocker is a splendid actor," Coleman commented in relating the story. "He would be an asset to any cast."

HE'LL STOP HUNTING FOR QUITE A WHILE

Ed. Hammel, of San Rafael, will probably give up night hunting for deer in season or out, after he gets through serving a 120 day sentence in the Marin county jail, and pays a $150 fine imposed by Justice of the Peace H. DeLa Montanya.

Hammel, with Joe Perry, was apprehended in Lucas valley by Game Wardens R. J. Yates and Ed. Clements the other night with a rifle and a spotlight. He was in deer country and the wardens took him to the county jail where Hammel admitted he was after deer. He pleaded guilty before Justice DeLa Montanya and was given the stiffest punishment a game law violator has received for some time in these parts. Perry was also found guilty, but his jail sentence was suspended and he was placed on two years probation.

Wardens have been advised that in the Marin district spotlight hunters were getting active of recent weeks, and they have been exerting every effort to catch them. It is believed the punishment meted out in the Hammel case will have a very discouraging effect upon others who might be planning to get themselves some illegal venison by night hunting.

A certain gang of thieves in Salt Lake City could hardly be classed among the "light-fingered gentry." They stole an entire blacksmith shop and 24,000 bricks.

PERFECT JELLY, HOW TO MAKE IT

Tasty Combinations Suggested by Expert.

By EDITH M. BARBER

THE perfect jelly is one which is firm, but not too firm, which will turn out of the glass and keep the shape of the mold, but still be slightly quivering. The flavor will depend, of course, upon the fruit or the combination of fruits you use for making the jelly and whether you use the old-fashioned method which produces excellent results, if successfully made, or the new-fashioned method which is known as foolproof method. With the old-fashioned method you get what may be called a richer flavor; with the new fashioned method you get a flavor which is more delicate, perhaps more nearly like that of the fresh fruit.

For the old-fashioned method you use merely the strained juice of berries or fruit which have been cooked with very little water and sugar. To be sure that your fruit juice will jelly, you must use the proper amount of sugar. We no longer use cup for cup as the old recipes tell us. We use one tablespoonful of hot juice and add to it an equal amount of alcohol and let it stand two or three minutes. If this mixture has jellied so that you can take it up upon the spoon without its breaking, you may use one cupful of sugar to one cupful of juice. If the mixture jellies but breaks as you take it upon the spoon, you will need three-quarters of a cupful of sugar to one cupful of juice. If it does not jelly at all, cook the juice down or add bottled pectin or green apple juice until you get a jelly test.

Bottled pectin, by the way, is merely concentrated apple juice. When you use the newer, more popular, foolproof method of making jelly you are actually combining apple juice with your fruit juice in large enough quantities so that the mixture will be concentrated. In making jelly in this way follow exactly the recipes which come with the bottle of pectin. They have been worked out carefully after long experimental work.

To go back to the old-fashioned method of making jelly. After we have combined the fruit juice and the sugar and have stirred the mixture until the sugar is dissolved, we must boil it until we get a jelly test. I make my test by dipping the spoon into the sirup and shaking it off above the kettle. When two drops will hang side by side upon the edge of the spoon the jelly is ready to pour into the hot glasses. It should be skimmed before it is poured, but it need not be skimmed during the boiling.

Whichever method I have used for making the jelly, I add a thin layer of melted paraffin immediately after it has been poured into the glasses. The next day, when it is cold, I add a second layer of paraffin before I put on the covers and label it for storage.

I am giving you recipes for jelly made both ways.

Preparing Juice.

Select and wash fruit. Remove the hulls, stem and blossom ends. Cut hard fruits into pieces without peeling or coring.

For soft fruits use just enough water to prevent sticking. Heat gradually, mash while heating and cook until the pulp has lost its color.

For hard fruits, cook with just enough water to cover until the fruit is tender. Do not mash if you wish to have a clear jelly. Strain the juice through a wet flannel jelly bag, but do not squeeze, as this will give a cloudy jelly.

When the juice has stopped dripping from jelly bag return the pulp to the preserving kettle, add enough water to cover, heat gradually and simmer for 30 minutes and strain again through jelly bag. Test for pectin and if the test shows sufficient pectin, present a third extraction may be made. Keep the juice obtained from first extraction separate from juice obtained in second and third extractions, as juice from the first extraction usually makes a clearer jelly.

Test strained juice for pectin to determine whether it contains sufficient pectin which in turn indicates the proportion of sugar to be used.

Old-Fashioned Jelly.

To obtain best results in jelly making it is advisable to work with a small quantity of juice. Two quarts of juice is a sufficiently large quantity to handle at one time.

Measure juice, add sugar and boil rapidly for five minutes and stir until the sugar is dissolved. Skim when jelly is done and pour into glasses, and seal with paraffin.

The top should be loose to prevent the jelly from weeping.

Raspberry Jelly.

4 cups (2 lbs.) juice
7½ cups (3¼ lbs.) sugar
1 bottle fruit pectin

To prepare juice, crush thoroughly or grind about three quarts fully ripe berries. Place in jelly cloth or bag and squeeze out juice.

Measure sugar and juice into large saucepan and mix. Bring to a boil over hottest fire and at once add fruit pectin, stirring constantly. Then bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard half minute. Remove from fire, skim, pour quickly. Paraffin hot jelly at once. Makes about eleven glasses.

Flour Bags Carry Messages of Love

Winnipeg.—M. Olson, of Outlook, Sask., is searching for a wife in a novel way. He is sending out proposals in bags of flour.

Olson has had no luck so far, for all of the women finding his notes are married.

Leeches to Treat Sick Still Are Used in Ohio

Cleveland.—Hundreds of Cleveland foreign-born still cling to the practice of using leeches.

The Red Cross pharmacy, a drug store here, does a national business in the blood suckers as well as catering particularly to Cleveland Hungarians.

L. H. Fisher, manager of the drug store's mail-order department, said he mails thousands of leeches each spring to all parts of the country and to Canada.

"We import them all. Our people believe the American leeches are not good. They are too large and their bellies are black, in contrast with the green color of European kinds.

"We transport them here in plain earth and they live on nothing but fresh water and air. They are caught in European marshes by women and children, who wade into the water barefooted and wait until enough leeches attach themselves to their legs."

Fisher said some persons treat themselves with as many as twelve of the tiny creatures at once. The smaller they are the more they can suck.

To Restore First Slave Cemetery in New Jersey

Mays Landing, N. J.—Historical societies plan to clear the debris from historical Shore Road cemetery, the first slave burying ground in New Jersey. The only identification now on the grounds is a plain marble slab bearing the inscription "Angelina Taylor, died September 5, 1833, aged eighty-three years." Historical writings frequently referred to the cemetery, which marked the first foothold of slavery in the state.

A high percentage of Quakers among the early settlers in this vicinity prevented great numbers of slaves at any time. At one time there were 12,000 slaves in the state, however, mostly in the northern portion.

Lights of New York

By L. L. STEVENSON

Standing at Wall and Nassau streets, my imagination went back to 145 years ago. The stone structure, once the United States subtreasury, now the passport office, changed to a much different building—the city hall of Colonial times, which was also the capitol of the province of New York. The hurrying crowds of bankers, brokers, panhandlers, messengers, runners, telegraph operators, typists, filing clerks traders, millionaires and down and outers changed to those who had witnessed the birth of liberty. The hurrying ceased and Colonials massed in front of the city hall. Then the Ward statue of George Washington changed from bronze to flesh and blood. On a platform were the members of the first congress of the United State of America. With them were generals who had fought under Washington. Beside Washington stood Robert H. Livingston, chancellor of the state of New York and grand master of the Masons. Heads were bared and there was a great stillness. Chancellor Livingston was about to administer the inaugural oath to the first President of the United States.

* * *

Instead of administering the oath, Chancellor Livingston turned to Gen. Jacob Morton, marshal of the day. There was a whispered conference at the conclusion of which General Morton hurried away while the crowd wondered. From the platform, General Morton sped to the Old Coffee house at Wall and Water streets, the meeting place of St. John's lodge of Masons of which he was master. He was gone only a few moments. When he returned, he was carrying a large Bible resting on a cushion of crimson velvet. He had taken that Bible from the altar of St. John's lodge. Then it became known to those on the platform at least that while other details had been attended to carefully the matter of a Bible for administering the oath had been overlooked.

* * *

Washington, according to Ossian Lang's "History of Free Masonry in the state of New York," placed his hand upon the page containing the forty-ninth chapter of Genesis from verse 13 until the end, more particularly Jacob's blessing of Joseph, "the prince among the brethren." Following the administration of the oath, Washington kissed the book reverently. There was another moment of silence. "It is done," cried out Chancellor Livingston. Then waving his hand, he exclaimed with a joyous shout, "Long Live George Washington." A great cheer arose. The Republic was at its beginning. "Move on," said a voice in my ear, "you're blocking traffic." And I smiled at the statue looking down benignly on the passing throngs.

* * *

The Bible on which the hand of Washington rested and which he kissed on that historic day is still in existence and is still the property of the lodge that owned it at the time. With the spell of the past still on me, I'd have liked to see it. But that was impossible. So precious is the relic that it is kept under lock and key except when used in lodge work, and is permitted to leave the lodge only on unanimous vote of the members. Then it must be accompanied by a committee of five, three of which must be past masters of the lodge. The historic pages are covered with transparent silk. The Bible was presented to the lodge by Jonathan Hampton, November 28, 1775, the night on which he was installed as master.

Recently, a young woman wrote asking about the chances of getting her song published. The head of the largest firms in the country told me that the chances are remote since established song writers are having difficulty in getting their works produced. The state of the song business, he added, is reflected by "Smoke Gets Into Your Eyes," the hit number of "Roberta." Despite its popularity, the sales have not reached 100,000 copies. In the old days, they would have been well over a million.

How It Started

By Jean Newton

"Bread of Affliction"

"THEIRS indeed is the bread of affliction."

It was in these words that an investigator recently epitomized the fruits of the working day of a large portion of our population, engaged in a certain industry which for decades has been considered uneconomic; and which, probably chiefly on this account, has been beset with all the trials and tribulations inherent in industrial disputes.

The "Bread of Affliction" is a metaphorical allusion to a bare living, earned under circumstances so painful, under conditions so unpleasant and distressing, that those so "afflicted" are prone to wonder—if their minds are not too dulled to wonder—whether or not it is worth while to keep on living.

The expression comes to us straight from the Bible where it is found used in a similar sense in Deut. 16:3.

Author of

"ETIQUETTE," "THE BLUE BOOK OF SOCIAL USAGE," ETC.

DINNER GIVING

MY DEAR Mrs. Post: Would you please sum up a list, including all items, for my waitress to remember when setting the dinner table for a dinner party?

Answer: The items of a properly equipped dinner table include:

1. A tablecloth, or place mats, or whatever is to be the foundation of the setting.

2. A centerpiece, of fruit or flowers, or an ornament complete in itself.

3. A place plate (often called a service plate) marking the center of each place set for each person at table.

4. Flat silver: whichever implements are necessary for the courses to be served, but three forks, three knives and soup spoon, and either fruit spoon or oyster fork maximum amount.

5. Never less than four candlesticks or two candelabra. Two candles are absurdly out of proportion to any table bigger than a card table. (No candles in daylight.)

6. Two dishes of sweets on a refectory table, four dishes on a round or square table.

7. Glasses for whatever you serve. (Never put on glasses or pieces of flat silver, which are not to be used.)

8. Salt cellars and pepper pots between every two places.

9. A napkin on each place plate.

At a family dinner, bread and butter plates are allowed. But never at a halfway formal dinner party. Conventional place cards are not very suitable for dinners of less than ten or for lunches of less than eight. On the other hand, if you like fancy place cards or favors, there is certainly no reason why you should not set your own table with what you like—especially at Christmas or Thanksgiving, or at a birthday party, or a wedding anniversary, or other intimate dinners. On more formal occasions, plain place cards are best.

Salted nuts are put either in small individual dishes above each plate, or in a pair of dishes; one at either side or end of the table. Certain hostesses always include them, others rarely if ever do, just as olives, radishes and celery are always served at certain tables and never at others.

CONCERNING THE YOUNG

DEAR Mrs. Post: Should a young girl of fifteen pay a party call after dining with strangers, although the hostess' daughter is a schoolmate of hers? And should she leave a visiting card? After such an invitation, is there anything a girl of this age can possibly do to return the invitation?

Answer: It would be polite to go to see them, yes. Whether to leave a card or not depends upon the custom of your community. If all young girls have cards, then yes. Otherwise, always best to do as others of your neighborhood do. Return this invitation by inviting your schoolmate to your house or to the movies or to whatever you can that you think would amuse her.

* * *

My dear Mrs. Post: I am going to college this fall and would like to know now what is expected of a boy when he invites a girl from out of town to any of the house-parties or dances at school. What share of her expenses is expected from him?

Answer: He should meet her at the station and take her to wherever she is to stay; send her a few flowers, perhaps, to wear at the dance; and he should make whatever agreeable engagements for her that he can. But he does not pay her railroad or her hotel bill—nor that of her chaperon.

* * *

Dear Mrs. Post: I am a divorcee. How should my daughter introduce her father's wife to strangers? She stays with them sometimes because we both have agreed that she should not be deprived of either her mother or father.

Answer: As her "stepmother."

* * *

My dear Mrs. Post: When two boys and a girl (or perhaps two girls and a boy is more usual) walk or go to the movies together, or ride in a car, should the odd person sit between the other two, or is there some other way in better taste?

Answer: When they walk, the girls together, the boy on the curb side of the pavement. In a car or at the movies the boy sits next to the girl whose especial friend he is. If he knows both equally well then he sits wherever there is place—next to one or the other, or he can perfectly well sit between them. On the street a man is not supposed to be sandwiched, because he must walk on the curb side of the street. At present this rule is being recognized as rather senseless.

Word Urge, as a Noun

Urge as a noun has been restored to the language gradually within the past twenty years, and can be said to be in good standing again, says Literary Digest. As a noun, it was in restricted use in the early Seventeenth century, then disappeared until Walt Whitman brought it to light in 1884 in "Leaves of Grass": "Oh, I am sure they really came from Thee, The urge, the ardor, the unconquerable will."

POPULAR COLMA SOCIETY COUPLE MARRIED AT HOME

At an impressive ceremony, Saturday evening last at 8:30 o'clock, Miss Hilda A. Witt, daughter of Claus H. Witt, became the bride of Edward J. Dennis at the home of the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Dennis, in Colma.

The bridal party stood beneath a bower of pink snapdragons and asparagus fern from the center of which hung a cluster of white wedding bells. Large pink hydrangea plants formed a beautiful background.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Arthur Brohm of the Lutheran Church.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. She appeared lovely in a gown of white ivory satin with long sleeves and train. Tiny white satin buttons were the only trimmings. The veil of tulle formed a small cap, which was held in place by little clusters of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of gardenias and lilies of the valley.

Joan Garibaldi, niece of the groom, was flower girl. She wore a dainty pink silk crepe dress and carried a little white basket with a pink bow and filled with Cecil Bruner roses and maiden hair fern.

The maid of honor, Miss Muriel Grisler, was gowned in pink taffeta and carried a sheath of yellow roses.

The groom was attended by his brother, John Dennis.

George Olmo, tenor, rendered "Oh, Promise Me" and "I Love You Truly" before the ceremony, with Mrs. Ethel Lombardi accompanying at the piano. The latter also played the Lohengrin "Wedding March."

In the late afternoon a wedding dinner was served at the San Remo Hotel in San Francisco for relatives and a number of intimate friends.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home and a delicious buffet luncheon was served to more than 300 guests. The bride cut the beautiful wedding cake and distributed it to those present.

A three piece orchestra furnished music for dancing, which was enjoyed by the younger people.

The young couple left following the ceremony for a two weeks motor tour in the North. After their return they will make their home in Daly City.

COUNTY HEALTH NEWS

Note: This is a weekly report from the San Mateo County Department of Public Health and Welfare, giving facts of importanec for health protection and a list of all contagious diseases reported to the County Health Officer in the previous week, as required by law.

POLIO AND POLITICS

The reading and voting public of San Mateo County is entitled to know the facts in connection with the use of the poliomyelitis emergency to satisfy political grudges.

At the very height of the most extensive poliomyelitis epidemic which California has ever experienced, one physician and one clerk has been eliminated from the staff of the Department of Public Health of the county and the budget requests, as submitted by the Director, have been either absolutely ignored or manipulated for partisan purposes.

This department canot furnish effective services for the protection of public health without adequate personnel and reasonable appropriations. To cut off any salaries or other budget items which we had last year, is evidence of a concerted effort to obstruct the functioning of this department in every possible way.

The writer is taking this opportunity to appeal to the community as a whole for adequate support of this emergency. We are not alarmed at the prospect of an increased number of cases of infantiie paralysis, but if we are not given the necessary facilities to prevent further spread of the disease, deaths and serious paralyses which may occur will be largely the fault of the politicians.

It is time the people of San Mateo County voiced the same protest which was effective in securing the maintenance of the headquarters of the Department of Health and Welfare at Community Hospital. Our present personnel and appropriations are so absolutely inadequate to maintain a standard type of service that we shall probably be forced to discontinue even such work as the publication of our weekly health reports. With the present personnel, we are absolutely unable to inaugurate such urgently needed measures as the inspection and licensing of food establishments and the routine testing of water supplies and the following up of those found to be polluted. The most we can do, at the present time, is to investigate specific complaints which are brought to our attention and, even in such cases, we cannot guarantee promptness in some instances where promptness is essential to success.

The Advisory Board of Health and welfare has shown itself to be interested in politics exclusively. Throughout the months of the existence of the board as at present constituted, not one constructive measure has been initiated or furthered. Its entire efforts have been exerted in blocking every proposition or project initiated by the Director of Health and Welfare. The bias of the Board has been well exemplified by its repeated refusal to allow the secretary of the department to be present at board meetings so that a complete and accurate record of business may be made. The present board is so ignorant of every interest of those who appointed them that a complete new personnel is necessary if it is ever to serve any essential function.

The writer will be glad to answer any questions which may be asked publicly or privately regarding the existing situation and anything which has led up to it. He will gladly address any organization and answer any question in connection with public health regardless of whose political toes may be stepped on.

If the community believes in public health and believes it should be administered by one who is professionally qualified, who devotes his entire time to this work, and who cannot be controlled by self-seeking politicians, now is the time for the people of San Mateo County to express themselves. Expressions by letter, phone or personal calls and particularly letters to the newspapers and to the Board of Supervisors will be welcomed.
